

Your two worst nightmares: Gen Y and working mums

Wish your female talent never had babies & Gen Y's were never born?

The tricky part is they both add value to your company...

How would your company be different, if you could ...

- A. Let off some steam about Gen Y and Working Mothers ("creative brainstorm")
- B. Gain insights into how to get on with them ("generational communication")
- C. Appreciate each other's eccentricities ("diversity")
- D. Ensure they actually return from Christmas holidays ("engagement / retention")

addressing: Your Two Worst Workplace Nightmares

what: Pre-Christmas Lunch n Learn (on-site)

a comedy in two acts performed by:

The Gen Yer - a reformed lawyer takes a Devil's Advocate perspective on these workplace babies

The Working Mum - the talent you need who knows where babies come from.

About your speakers

the gen y

Anders Sorman-Nilsson is a reformed lawyer and front funky thinker at training and coaching firm Thinqe. He is a thought leader on how companies can funky up their thinking and future-proof their business brains in a world that is just a little out of whack.

He facilitates workshops and think tanks that get cross-generational teams to fire on all cylinders (diversity and productivity), inoculate Gen Y with emotional intelligence (eq / managing up), and teaches management creative problem-solving skills (funky thinking) to maximise their ROT (return on thinking).

Anders' has authored the White Paper Funky Ys: how to Attract, Incubate, and Retain Gen Y Talent (2007), 7 Career Mistakes You Must Avoid (ebook), and his book 'Funky Thinking: positioning your business brain in a whacky world' is due for release internationally in early 2008. Clients include: Macquarie Bank, Sydney Roosters, Reactive Media (BRW Fast 100), Australian Legal Practice Managers Association, and Civil Aviation Safety Authority.
